

JOHN P.
GATEWOOD

JOHN P. GATEWOOD

Confederate Bushwhacker

BY LARRY D.
STEPHENS

PELICAN PUBLISHING COMPANY
Gretna 2012

Copyright © 2012
By Larry D. Stephens
All rights reserved

The word "Pelican" and the depiction of a pelican are trademarks of Pelican Publishing Company, Inc., and are registered in the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office.

Library of Congress Cataloging-in-Publication Data

Stephens, Larry D.

John P. Gatewood : Confederate bushwhacker / by Larry D. Stephens.
p. cm.

Includes bibliographical references and index.

ISBN 978-1-4556-1711-1 (hardcover : alk. paper) — ISBN 978-1-4556-1712-8 (e-book) 1. Gatewood, John Pemberton, d. 1875? 2. Guerrilla warfare—Tennessee—History—19th century. 3. Guerrilla warfare—United States—History—19th century. 4. Guerrillas—Tennessee—Biography. 5. Guerrillas—United States—Biography. 6. Tennessee—History—Civil War, 1861-1865—Underground movements. 7. United States—History—Civil War, 1861-1865—Underground movements. I. Title.

E470.45.G37S74 2012

973.7'468092—dc23

[B]

2012016168

Printed in the United States of America

Published by Pelican Publishing Company, Inc.
1000 Burmaster Street, Gretna, Louisiana 70053

To my mother, who has never stopped praying for me and believing in me

Table of Contents

Acknowledgements	9
Introduction: Birth Pangs of War	13
Chapter 1: The Real Fighting Begins	25
Chapter 2: Back Country War.	41
Chapter 3: Eye for an Eye	49
Chapter 4: White County	61
Chapter 5: Massacre on the Calfkilker.	67
Chapter 6: Gatewood Takes the Reins	75
Chapter 7: Lafayette, Cedar Bluff, and Ellijay.	83
Chapter 8: The Red-Headed Beast of Georgia.	91
Chapter 9: Butchery in Polk County.	107
Chapter 10: The Great Cattle Raid	127
Chapter 11: End of the Line	135
Chapter 12: Into the West.	149
Notes	169
Selected Bibliography	183
Index	189

Acknowledgements

The incredible, yet profoundly tragic, story of John P. Gatewood, one of the Confederacy's most controversial and feared guerrilla leaders, could not have been told by me alone. This was a collaborative effort involving many people across several states. I owe each of those individuals a special word of thanks.

First of all, I want to thank my chief research assistant, Mr. Zack C. Waters, who is a published Civil War author in his own right. Zack is a personal friend, mentor, and expert authority on the War. His depth of historical knowledge, his suggestions for developing the manuscript, and his assistance in securing much of the needed documentation in order to tell Gatewood's story as completely as possible were absolutely indispensable to the success of this project. Zack, as you well know, I could not have orchestrated this entire project without you!

I also want to thank several folks at the college where I work for lending their expertise. These include: Harriet Kiser, for assisting with much of the research, as well as my good friend, LaNelle Daniel, professor of English, for proofing the manuscript and making suggestions along the way that would enhance the "story-telling aspect" of the book. Last, but not least, Jennifer Hicks was a godsend on technology and software issues.

There are many independent researchers who were able to lend a hand simply because I could not afford to spend the time nor the money in making several lengthy trips to California, Oklahoma, and Texas. I want to thank Vicki Betts, a wonderful librarian at the University of Texas-Tyler, and Susan Burneson, a fine researcher with the Center for American History in Austin. Vicki and Susan spent several hours hunting and finding copies of several primary source documents that were absolutely essential to telling Gatewood's story in Texas. Peggy Engledow of the Caldwell County Historical Society deserves a great deal of credit for uncovering some of Gatewood's clandestine activities in the Lone Star State. A special word of thanks also goes out to Shirley Woodlock, president of the Waco, Texas, chapter of the United Daughters of the Confederacy, who furnished a copy of Emma Gatewood's 1938 application for membership in the Texas UDC.

Marian Presswood of the Polk County, Tennessee, Historical Society and Jo Ann Garren Finnell of the Bradley County, Tennessee, History Library were both invaluable contacts. Both of these dear ladies helped me find resources that documented Gatewood's activities in southeast Tennessee.

A number of researchers in California were employed in the search for any trace of Gatewood's "alleged life and death" in the Bear State, and they include the following persons: Anne Harshman, librarian and member of the San Bernardino Valley Genealogical Society; Greg Pisano with the San Luis Obispo Genealogy/Historical Society; Sandy Nozick, reference librarian with the Kern County Public Library; Helen Rydell with the Santa Barbara County Genealogy Society; Peter Steelquist, past president of the San Diego Genealogical Society; and Nancy Peterson, research director of the California Genealogical Society.

In closing, I want to thank several key individuals with whom I became acquainted on this amazing three-year journey: an odyssey which took me across three Southern states and even out to Texas in the first week of 2009. They include Robert Scott Davis, director of the family history department at Wallace State Community College in Hanceville, Alabama; Tom Mullin at the Anniston Public Library's Alabama Room in Anniston, Alabama; Dawn Hampton of the Local History/Genealogy Room at the Sara Hightower Regional Library in Rome, Georgia; Ben Hammons, curator of collections at the Layland Museum in Johnson County, Texas; and Trent Shotwell, archivist for the Texas Prison Museum in Huntsville, Texas.

Last, but not least, I want to thank my friend and colleague, Mr. Brian Barr, for the incredible artistic rendering of John P. Gatewood and the riveting illustrations inside the book. He captured the savagery and the spirit of our subject as no other artist could have.

There are scores of other individuals whom I cannot begin to name, but who assisted me along the way. They include staff persons at the Tennessee State Archives in Nashville; the Genealogy/History Department of the Chattanooga-Hamilton County Bicentennial Library; the Cherokee County Public Library in Centre, Alabama; the White County Public Library in Sparta, Tennessee; and the Fentress County Public Library in Jamestown, Tennessee. Thanks to all of you for helping me “find what I needed to find” in order to make this book a reality! God bless you all!

Larry Stephens

