

UNITED STATES

Julia searches for solace and that moment when nature completely envelopes her spirit. . . . “It’s not the photography I love; it’s nature I love.”

St. Paul Island, located in the Bering Sea approximately three hundred miles off the west coast of Alaska, is home to the horned and crested puffins.

Alaska, 1991

In 1991, I went to Alaska alone, searching for some comfort from the intense grief I was going through after Billy's death.

Horned puffins are colorful cliff dwellers on St. Paul Island.

Marmots, Denali National Park

Red fox eating freshly caught squirrel, Denali National Park

Cow moose grabbing a bite to eat, Denali National Park

Dall sheep young are called lambs. Brooks Range

Opposite: Alaskan male dall sheep, called rams. The females, or ewes, have shorter, slightly curved horns. Brooks Range

Murres, Bering Sea

Male seal, St. Paul Island

Auklets nesting on the cliffs of St. Paul Island

Stellar sea lions, St. Paul Island

Mount McKinley, view from a small plane

Mount McKinley in the early-morning glow

Sedona, Arizona's reputation as a spiritual center and global power spot draws artists and spiritual guides throughout the world.